

Baltimore's steam pipe system

Five people were injured Tuesday evening after an underground steam pipe exploded downtown, sending mud and chunks of asphalt into the air and breaking the windows of cars parked nearby. Veolia North America maintains a system of steam pipes in Baltimore that deliver steam and water to Baltimore institutions and businesses, powered by their own plants and a waste-to-energy plant.

KEY:

SOURCE: Veolia North America, staff reporting

ADAM MARTON / BALTIMORE SUN GRAPHIC